NERVILINE

New U. S. Warship Has Serious Defects

16-Inch Guns of Super-Dreadnought Cannot Be Fired Simultaneously

The huge 16-inch guns of the new super-dreadnought Pennsylvania cannot be fired simultaneously. This fact was revealed during the target practice indulged in during the government acceptance tests.

The Pennsylvania, with her sister ship Arizona—just completed in the Brooklyn Navy Yard—are the first dreadnoughts to have all their big guns installed three to a turret. The super-dreadnoughts Oklahoma and Nevada have only two guns in each turret, containing three guns, but the remaining two turrets only contain two guns.

The trouble discovered on the Pennsylvania also exists in the three-inch gun turrets, it is learned. While the three guns in the turrets are fired simultaneously the middle gun becomes deflected and cannot be controlled.

Misery in Back, Headache and Pain in Limbs.

Dear Mr. Editor—For more than a year I suffered with misery in the back, dull headache, pain in the limbs, was somewhat constipated and slept poorly at night until I was about ready to collapse. Seeing an account of the wonderful qualities of "Anurio," prepared by Doctor Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., I sent for a box, and before using the whole box I felt and still feel improved. My sleep is refreshing, misery reduced, and life is not the drag it was before. Most cheerfully recommend this remedy to sufferers from like ailments.

Yours truly, W. A. KILGORE.

Notes: You've all undoubtedly heard of the famous Dr. J. C. Pierce and his well-known medicine. Well, this prescription is one that has been successfully used for many years by the physician, and specialist of Dr. Pierce's Invalid Hotel and Surgical Institute, of Buffalo, N. Y., for kidney complaints, and diseases arising from disorders of the kidneys and bladder, such as backache, weak back, rheumatism, dropsy, congestion of the kidneys, inflammation of the bladder, cooling urine, and urinary troubles.

Up to this time, "Anurio" has not been on sale to the public, but by the persuasion of many patients and the increased demand for this wonderful healing Tablet, Dr. Pierce has finally decided to put it into the drug stores of this country within immediate reach of all sufferers.

I know of one or two leading druggists in town who have been arranged to procure a supply of "Anurio" for their anxious customers in and around this locality. If you desire to send one dime by mail to Dr. Pierce for trial package or 60 cents for full treatment. Editors—Please insert this letter in some conspicuous place in your paper.

The Market Report

Weekly Grain Letter Supplied by Randall, Glee & Mitchell, Ltd., Winnipeg

There is one feature of the present wheat situation that is of the utmost importance, and the one that, undoubtedly, is the cause for the persistent strength of the market at the high level. It is to be noted that since the inception of the advance the situation has grown steadily more bullish. This is a development out of the ordinary, as it is generally being discovered after the agitation has subsided now the early reports have to be compared with the actual outcome that the scare exaggerated conditions. No one can say that that is the case this season, for it can be said that the run of news which affected crop production is still favorable to high prices. Whatever other influences have entered into the trade calculations are factors that are based on the possibility of the world's supply of bread stuffs being augmented by the Russian surplus through successful military operations of the Entente Powers.

The foundation of the present bull market was laid, of course, in the heavy winter loss, in the south wheat states. At that time, the liberality of the world's carry over from the generous 1915 harvest was a drag on any permanent market response. It was the time when the statistical position of the wheat being harvested on the market. Importers had the utmost confidence of obtaining adequate supplies and felt that they had the real advantage in the market.

It was the great heat wave of July and its heavy toll of the spring wheat crop that gave the real impetus to the bull market. The winter wheat harvest was moderate, and on the top of that came a most unfavorable Northwest harvest. From that time on the developments have been towards a reduction of the world's wheat production. The yield in the United States shows only a small reserve above the country's needs, and a surplus available for the export, and exporting countries in the aggregate, is small when the conditions governing the international market are taken into consideration. The reports from Canada indicate a decided shrinkage from expectations, and the news from the other principal countries do not suggest at this writing more than ordinary yields.

It is not expected that the importing countries will increase their production under the abnormal conditions that prevail. In fact, the reports are unfavorable. The requirements from exporters will be large this season, and exporting countries in the aggregate have far less to give than last year. Whether prices have fully discounted this extraordinary situation is a matter of debate between the bulls and the bears. The situation has not been exaggerated.

Abernethy Gives $561 to the Relief Funds

The best of all the local efforts for the relief funds was made at Abernethy school Friday evening last. Great credit is due to all who in any way assisted to make this possible, the meeting under the supervision of Mrs. Jas. Robertson and Mr. Proulx, the teacher of the school, was well attended. A programme of songs, recitations and music was given by the pupils of the school, followed by an address illustrated by a large number of views showing the Canadian boys in the trenches, the navy, etc., by Mr. J. A. Irvine, of Calgary, secretary of the British sailors' relief fund, and who also acted as chairman of the meeting. A large number of the ladies donated cushions, aprons, socks, and other articles, and a number of the men of the district gave grain, potatoes, coals and other animals which were sold. The total sum realized was $561.00 which will be divided between the Sailors' relief fund and other patriotic funds.

Great credit is due to Mr. S. Ptolemy for the able manner the children under his care performed their part of the programme.

Supper was served by the ladies followed by a dance, which was kept up to the wee sma' hours of the morning, music was furnished by T. Southwood and D. Mallock.

The principal contributors were:- Messrs. J. Robertson, T. Bille, G. Baxter, E. Muscroft, Mr. and Mrs. Heron, P. Ross, S. Booker, Alice Ross, Angus Robertson, H. McKenzie, Earl Duane, E. Archibald, J. Ballantyne, S. Ptolemy, Willard Hudd.

LADY URSULA'S HUSBAND

BY
FLORENCE WARDENWest, Lock & Co., Limited

Paul hesitated, and there was a pause. Then Lord Eastling looked steadily at his brother-in-law.

Paul looked back at him, raising his eyebrows slightly, as if expecting him to retire. But Lord Eastling held his ground.

Lady Ursula, seeing that both men were irritated, and vaguely fearful of an explosion, began to put the jewels away without asking any more questions. Paul laid his hand upon her.

"Wait a moment," he said. "Don't put those things away yet. The man from the jeweller's is here to take them to be re-set. I have just been seeing him and giving him instructions."

Lord Eastling, feeling the awkwardness of his position, and that Paul wanted to speak to his wife, was moving unwillingly towards the door. But these words arrested him, and he turned back.

"Surely," he said, "you don't mean to let that fellow take away anything of value! I wouldn't trust him across the street with half a sovereign."

He felt that the circumstances excused this hardness. Lady Ursula agreed with him, for she hastily put away more of the unset gems, instead of obeying her husband. She knew that something was wrong, and she did not dare to ask what it was. Meanwhile she hoped that her husband would change his mind.

She did not care for jewellery in the abstract, but she was proud of the gems which Paul had given her, and she felt that they were in danger.

How could Paul fail to see this, too?

Suddenly she looked up at him inquiringly. He was very pale, and he and Lord Eastling were facing each other with fierce looks.

"It's a pity, Eastling," said Paul, "that you can't learn to mind your own business."

"I've found minding other people's business to be the best," retorted the young man, with blazing eyes. "What do you mean?"

"I had a hand in bringing about a satisfactory settlement of a very grave scandal," said Lord Eastling boldly.

This frank reminder of the way in which he had played detective threw Paul into a rage. He sprang at his brother-in-law, Lord Eastling on the alert, threw herself between them.

"Think what you're doing, think what you're saying! both of you," she implored, speaking in a low voice, in thrilling tones of passionate appeal.

"And think of my looks!"

The words, the tone, the tenderness with which she thrust a hand out towards each of them, keeping them apart, and at the same time impressing upon them her own affection and her own trust in their kindness, had an instant effect upon both men.

Lord Eastling took his sister's hand in his and held it.

"I'm sorry, dear," said he, "that I lost my temper. After all, and he raised his head and glanced at his brother-in-law, "perhaps I can be more useful downwards than I can here."

He dropped Lady Ursula's hand, and went quickly out of the room.

An exclamation, which he uttered for his wife's sake, burst from Paul's lips.

pected, making his way to the room where the stranger was waiting. Paul overtook him near the door.

"What are you up to?" he asked sharply.

"I was going to speak to the jeweller," replied Lord Eastling.

There was a pause. Both men were still so fiercely excited that they looked as if about to fly at the throat of the other.

But Paul realized that he had no more to fear from Lord Eastling than the young man had from him, and he suddenly altered his tone.

"Come here," he said with a change to comparative amiability in his look and manner, "let me have a word with you before you speak to him."

He led the way into the empty breakfast-room, shut the door and turned to his brother-in-law.

"Now," said he, "will you tell me what the dickens you mean by interfering in this way in my private affairs?"

Along with the other, Lord Eastling said, "I don't know what you mean."

"Of course I'll tell you," he said quietly, "if there's any need of telling me."

"Explain yourself."

"That fellow in the other room is no more respectable than you are, very likely."

"But he's a jeweller, and anyhow, if I choose to trust my property with him, isn't it his affair?"

"No! Do you know what you're saying? Do you pretend that you ought to have a voice in what I do, just because you happen to be my wife's brother?"

Lord Eastling sat on the edge of the table and regarded the other steadily.

"I suppose I may as well speak now," he said, at last, after a long pause, "now we've got so far. I know that this fellow who is waiting to take these stones away was hanging about in town in the restaurant where you and I had luncheon."

"Was he? I didn't notice him."

"He and the fellow who was with him must have had an appointment with you, I suppose, which you couldn't keep because I was with you."

"You are very discerning!" sneered Paul.

"I don't know about that, but anyhow, I know you wrote something on the edge of the card on the table, and that the water took it over to the man."

Paul was surprised. He betrayed that by the flash of his eyes.

"Really! You seem able to see much further into a mill-stone than other people," he said.

"So that when he went to your room at the hotel, and was hanging about the village yesterday, very on Lord Eastling, "it was inevitable that one should ask oneself what he was doing?"

Paul turned upon him sharply.

"Well, and what do you think he was doing?" demanded he.

But the younger man held his ground.

"I suppose I may take it for granted," he said slowly, "that he was here in connection with the loss of Mrs. Finchden's pearls."

This was plain speaking. But Paul had similar straightforward blows from his brother-in-law before.

"Well," he said, "your check is almost too superlative to make me angry."

"How can you be angry," said Lord Eastling, "when you know that I've dragged you out of one quagmire already?"

"What quagmire?"

"Arrest for stealing the pearls."

Paul shrugged his shoulders.

"Oh, we never hear the last of that story, that I'm a forger and a thief? Don't you think I'm a better, instead of dangle these calumnies about the village yesterday, very on Lord Eastling, "it was inevitable that one should ask oneself what he was doing?"

stones out of their settings, doesn't it?"

"Not when one wishes to have one's wife up-to-date in respect of her jewels or accessories; and I believe that the two men I saw you with at the restaurant are in league with you and your accomplices; and I believe that day has come to take away the unset stones, and to relieve you of the responsibility of them."

"Why should I feel any responsibility?"

"Because, as I dare say you know, what has happened here during the last few days has drawn attention to you, and I don't know myself to what matters in motion."

"I do know that there is a police officer waiting in the grounds."

"What does that matter to me?"

But Paul had changed color, and he spoke he glanced nervously at the window. Lord Eastling came a step nearer to him, and lowered his voice.

"It's a confoundedly unpleasant business for us all," he said. "And I never thought I should have to warn you of the consequences of your own member by marriage, that he was being shadowed by the police."

"They're welcome to shadow me," said Paul, recovering himself.

"Well," said Lord Eastling, "I hope you mean it. But I have to tell you that the man who is watching in the grounds is the very officer who told me I brought out your past life."

"D—," said Paul.

For Better Crops

Selected Seed Will Increase the Yield of Grain

Every farmer is anxious to increase the yield of his crops, but too few are willing to do so by the use of seed which this can be done. Quite apart from the duty incumbent upon every farmer to produce as much as possible, the raising of the average number of bushels per acre grown is a most important factor in making a considerable economic saving in the cost of production.

If the ordinary preparation given to the land on an average farm several more bushels of wheat, or other grains, can be grown per acre, the cost of production of that grain will naturally be reduced, and other conditions being equal, the farmer will make a higher net profit per acre.

It is certain that an increase in yield can be obtained on every farm if carefully selected, plump, pure seed of a suitable variety be used.

Dr. James Robertson, president of the Canadian Seed Growers' Association, said in his address at the last annual meeting that at least $3,000,000 more was obtained for crops last year through the work of the association in promoting seed selection, and as yet its activities are confined to a comparative few farmers throughout the country. According to official statistics, over 40 million bushels of seed of all kinds are required annually in Canada. Of this amount, the three western provinces use about 20 million bushels. In spite of the fact that the average yield per acre in the past, the average yield per acre is unnecessarily low when compared with that obtained by the best farmers.

For instance, the average yield of spring wheat per acre is about 19 bushels, for oats, 35 bushels, and for barley 28 bushels. But many of the best farmers regularly produce an average of 25 to 30 bushels of wheat, from 55 to 85 bushels of oats, and from 40 to 60 bushels of barley. These factors are responsible for these high average yields, but one of the chief among them is the use of pure, plump seed of a suitable variety.

At the first of the season, the time to select the best heads in the crop for sowing in a seed plot for next year's seed.

It is in his own interest, if for no other reason, should this year determine which is the best head of grain in his own crop or make arrangements for securing a sufficient quantity of first-class seed for his readiness for next year's crop.

It may also pay farmers to become members of the Canadian Seed Growers' Association, which costs nothing and will be of great benefit to them.

Labor on the Farm

Yearly Employment of Help Would Be of Great Value to the Farmers

Farm labor conditions received careful attention in the agricultural survey conducted on 100 farms in each of four counties in Ontario during the summer of 1915 by the Commission of Conservation.

One of the signal facts revealed was the small number of farmers employing male help by the year. In Dundas 10 farmers, in Waterloo 9, in Northumberland 7, and in Carleton 35, provide yearly employment; or a total of 61 out of the 400. Those employing help by the month included 13 in Dundas, 10 in Waterloo, 6 in Northumberland and 15 in Carleton, while those providing employment by the day only were 41 in Dundas, 26 in Waterloo, 50 in Northumberland and 9 in Carleton.

Transients employed numbered 16 in Dundas, 42 in Waterloo, 19 in Northumberland and 9 in Carleton. Transient employment was thus provided for 256 men among the 400 farmers, as against 61 continually employed.

In view of the yearly complaints regarding the farm of help, the foregoing data indicate that much of the trouble is of the farm owner's making, and too much to expect that a floating labor market can be maintained to supply this large number of specific times.

At what are these men to secure a livelihood during the balance of the year? The answer is to be found in the majority of farms periods of great pressure, when the crops must be cared for, and usually at these times that the additional help is employed.

The farmer is not alone in this situation, however; many of our largest factories and business houses have had the same conditions to meet. One of the largest clothing manufacturers of the United States recently kept to the keeping to their staff of skilled workers had been one of their hardest problems. They had solved it, however, by utilizing their employees and plant in the manufacture of other lines for which it was adaptable during the off seasons in the clothing trade.

So with the farmer. He has at his command a wide range of production. By so operating his farm, he can increase his work at seasons when otherwise there would be no employment for his help. Competent help in the farm on the farm as in the factory; training help is an expensive undertaking. By providing continuing employment, the farmer not only overcomes this constant training of new men, but obtains the help he needs at the lowest cost.

One of the maxims of the Schools Divisional Union of the Ontario Agricultural College might be adopted with profit by the farmer. "Learn to look forward and plan your work."

By doing this the slack seasons would be eliminated, the farm would greatly increase its production, the farmer would be better off financially and would also be relieved of the worry due to the help problem.

Queer Superstition

Uneducated Peasants Believe That the czar of Russia Has Only One Ear

The uneducated peasants in the Chernov province of Russia have an extraordinary belief that the czar has only one ear. They are confirmed in their belief by pictures and photographs of the czar showing a side-face view and naturally exhibiting only one ear. They account for the absence of the other in the following manner:

Some time ago, they say, a deputation from their province waited upon the czar, and in the course of the meeting the czar is said to have stated that all Russian land would be equally divided among the peasants of the various districts.

To this one of the deputation boldly said: "As sure as you cannot see your own ears you will not divide the land."

The czar's reply to this was to cut off one of his (the czar's) ears, which he placed upon the table, remarking as he did so, "As surely as I now see my ear I will divide the land."

To this day one may find Chernov peasants who firmly believe that he has only one ear.—Tit-Bits.

Fresh Air a Necessity

Ventilation of Homes Essential to Health of Occupants

Many Canadians have returned from summer outings, of which the principal attraction and benefit were the enjoyment of the open air. Living in the open has health values superior to any artificial cure, and, during the warmer months, is fully enjoyed by the Canadians.

Today fresh air is a recognized remedy for tuberculosis and pneumonia and a preventive of disease generally.

It is regrettable that the interiors of the majority of homes in Canada are breeding places for disease, because of the difficulties in admitting fresh air. Foul air, containing exhalations from the lungs of the inmates, constitutes the atmosphere in many homes, and it cannot be otherwise when houses are built to exclude the external air.

It is a common mistake to confuse heat and bad air or cold and good air. The atmosphere may be below freezing and still be bad, or it may be above freezing and still be bad.

Buildings should be ventilated so that it will be impossible for the occupants to breathe air already used. A simple means of keeping the air of a room fresh is by a cross draft, secured by opening windows on either side of a house. Where there are windows on the side of a room, the opening should be made on the lower and the lower one raised. This allows the warm, foul air to escape through the upper window, while the fresh air from the outside enters below the lower.

Another means of opening above the upper sash of a window allows for ventilation and at the same time to lower the opening above the upper sash may be attached to the roller by four or five pieces of tape, about five inches long. This leaves a space between the roller and shade through which the pure cold air enters below the lower.

Our Race Has Not Degenerated

We have a list of decorations awarded to officers and men in the field which occupies a full page of the morning papers. England and the colonies—for both Canadians and Australians are conspicuous in the lists—will read with pride the detailed accounts that are given of the deeds which have been singled out for honor. There could be no better proof that the spirit of the race is as high as it has ever been, and that individual bravery has risen rather than diminished in the long years of comparative peace. Lists such as these are the best answer to those who assumed the degeneracy of the race before war broke out. As we read of the acts which have been singled out for mention, we have the feeling that the tests applied to heroism have never before been so strict, and that a man must do something very exceptional indeed before his claims to distinction are recognized.—Westminster Gazette.

Calls for Vengeance

Maori Member of New Zealand Parliament Makes Striking Speech

A striking speech was made at the closing session of the House of Representatives of the Dominion Parliament at Wellington, N.Z., by Dr. Pomare, a member of the Cabinet and a Maori. A resolution was before the House expressing the Parliament's inflexible determination to "continue the war to a successful end," when Dr. Pomare arose and said:

"Today Aegean breezes stie the grasses over the graves of mine and yours, and wherever a Maori hears the moan of the wind, whenever he hears the boom of guns it reminds him that away beyond the seas uti revenge" has got to be brought about for the dead. For that reason the Maori's determination to end the war victoriously is just as inflexible as that of the pakeha (white man). One result of the war will be the co-operation of the Empire and the understanding between the different races under the British flag. The spirit of New Zealand and of all the fighting Maori in the Maori today, and he cries in the same spirit of defiance, 'Ake, ake, ake!' (for ever and for ever)."

In calling for vengeance for the Maori dead Dr. Pomare had particular reference to the handful of soldiers of his race who, with a few white New Zealanders, reached, after desperate fighting, and held for a few minutes during the Suva Bay operations, a position from which they could see the central Dardanelles. This, it is said, was the utmost point reached by any of the allied troops in the Gallipoli campaign.

A Clever Dog

Learned a Trick That Worked Both Ways

There was an old lady who rented a furnished villa for the summer, and with the villa also went a large dog. In the sitting-room of the villa there was a very comfortable arm chair. The old lady liked the chair better than any other in the house.

But alas! she nearly always found the chair occupied by the large dog. Being afraid of the dog, she never dared bid it harshly to get out of the chair, as she feared that it might bite her; but instead she would go to the window and call "Cats!"

Then the dog would rush to the window and bark, and the old lady would slip into the vacant chair quietly.

One day the dog entered the room and found the old lady in possession of the chair. He trotted over to the window and, looking out, appeared very much excited and set up a tremendous barking.

The lady rose and hastened to the window to see what was the matter. Then the dog quietly climbed into the chair—Chicago Herald.

THE BLOT ON THE FLAG

Every man who is able to fight or pay, and will do neither, is a blot on the British flag, which all the glory of the Army and Navy cannot wash out. The blot can be cleansed only by the voluntary contributions of the public. Will you contribute your share?

The Patriotic Fund Appeal

The third appeal for the Patriotic Fund will soon be before us. The demands upon this fund grow heavier as the enlistments increase. Crossfield district did very well last year, but it is expected to do better this year. It is with pride we have looked upon the great-hearted generosity that has been so liberally handed out by the inhabitants of this district to the different relief funds.

There are many who escaped giving anything last year, but we hope these will realize their responsibility, and give a double portion this time. We can't force anybody to give a cent. But surely no one could be so mean to let others do all at a time like the present. Think what will be your feelings when the war is over and the boys come back and ask you "What did you do to save the Empire?" Will you have to hang your head and say "Nothing."

The man who does nothing at this time should have his name listed, and then his neighbors would know it.

There are some who feel that all is going well with the allies and have ceased worrying about the war and its problems. We must shake off that idea. Now is the time when we must stand firmly and solidly behind our country and our men. There must be no bulge in the line. We must help to maintain the loved ones the boys now serving the colors have left in the country's charge.

There are some people who say they are tired of giving. We wonder how much these have actually given. Have they given a loved one yet? Not likely. Their money givings have likely been small. People must give until it hurts in order to make a real sacrifice. A man has no more right to say he is tired of giving than the man at the front has to say that he is tired of fighting. Think of the long winter campaign these men will have to go through.

Crossfield will not fail in raising its quota this year.

Mr. Smoker a Word Please

We are asked to start a Subscription list at our office for the purpose of raising funds to purchase tobacco for the Canadian soldiers at the front who are greatly in need of it.

The money will be sent to the Calgary Herald Tobacco Fund, and the names of those donating will be published in both The Chronicle and the Calgary Herald and a post card addressed to you is enclosed in every 25c package you subscribe for, which enables the happy soldier who receives your gift to write and thank you personally when he can do so.

More than 25,000 packages have already been sent through this fund but the work is only just beginning and more assistance is needed.

Just think of the pleasure it will be to some fellow in the trenches without the wherewithal to get a smoke, and no chance to buy it, and someone comes along and hands him a neat little packet of tobacco. Subscription list at the Chronicle office. Come in and put down a quarter, you'll enjoy your next smoke better after doing it.

SUBSCRIPTIONS:

M. Thomas	25c
J. H. Havens, Sampson	50c
